Summer 2018

Guide To

Summer Reading for Incoming 6th Graders

Summer means sun and fun, biking and hiking, picnics and . . . RELAXING WITH A GOOD BOOK!! Famous newspapers publish summer reading lists, so why shouldn't we?

As an almost-former fifth-grader, you probably know how it feels to finish an exciting book: you feel satisfied with the story and pleased with your accomplishment. This summer you can get a "jump" on your sixth-grade reading requirement by keeping this summer reading log.

Inside is a list of great suggestions for reading, divided up into many genres. You can just find your favorite genre, and see if there's something there that you want to read. We've also added a list of "sixth grade favorites" on the last page, books recommended by the current sixth graders of Indian Valley.

Of course you don't have to read only the books we've listed here. The list is intended as a helpful suggestion.

What you do need to do this summer is to keep a reading log. Remember the district reading standards. You will set a new reading goal when you meet your sixth grade teacher in September, but your new year actually starts in June as soon as school is out. We want you to record the books that you read this summer on the log inside this booklet.

Here's your summer homework:

- Read at least two books this summer (or many more).
- Bring your book log to school with you in September. If you lose this log, make your list on a sheet of notebook paper.
- Your new sixth grade reading teacher will collect it from you in September.
